GPO APPOINTS LAW LIBRARIAN TO DEPOSITORY LIBRARY COUNCIL

American Association of Law Libraries Member Beth Williams Named to Advisory Committee

CHICAGO, April 12, 2016 — Today, director of the U.S. Government Publishing Office (GPO) Davita Vance-Cooks named American Association of Law Libraries (AALL) member Mary Elizabeth (Beth) Williams to the new class of the Depository Library Council (DLC).

The DLC advises the GPO director and the superintendent of documents on matters relating to the Federal Depository Library Program (FDLP), a network of approximately 1,200 libraries committed to making government information freely available to members of the public through their local libraries.

Williams, library director at the Robert Crown Law Library, Stanford Law School, will bring to the DLC a strong commitment to the preservation of government and legal information. She is active in the Legal Information Preservation Alliance, currently serving as chair of its Education Committee. She is also a well-regarded speaker on issues related to digitization and preservation, most recently presenting “Digitization on a Budget” at the 2015 Depository Library Council Meeting & Federal Depository Library Conference and “Is Digitization Preservation?” at William & Mary Law Library’s Law Repositories 2015: Shaping the Future conference.

As a member of the DLC, Williams will have the opportunity to advise the GPO as it addresses critical issues related to access to and preservation of tangible and electronic government information, including the National Plan for Access to U.S. Government Information and its associated Federal Information Preservation Network. These initiatives are critical to ensuring that federal government information—from all three branches of government—is preserved and made available to the public.

In accepting the appointment, Williams said, “I am thrilled to have the opportunity to work with the distinguished members of the Depository Library Council on the pressing issues of access to and preservation of government information and their relationship to social justice.”

Williams will join AALL members Melissa Bernstein and Scott Matheson on DLC. She will serve on the council from June 1, 2016, through May 31, 2019.
