RAVEL LAW WINS 2016 AALL NEW PRODUCT AWARD

American Association of Law Libraries Recognizes San Francisco-Based Company's Judge Analytics

CHICAGO, May 9, 2016—The American Association of Law Libraries (AALL) has chosen Ravel Law's Judge Analytics tool as its 2016 New Product Award winner.

The Judge Analytics tool identifies the cases, circuits, and judges a particular judge finds most persuasive and identifies rules and specific language that a judge commonly cites. The tool is part of Ravel's legal search, analytics, and visualization platform, created by co-founders Daniel Lewis and Nik Reed after they graduated from Stanford Law School.

AALL's New Product Award honors new commercial information products that enhance or improve existing law library services or procedures—or products that improve access to legal information, the legal research process, or procedures for the technical processing of library materials.

Eligible new products may include computer hardware and/or software; educational or bibliographic material; or other products and devices that aid or improve library workflow, research, or intellectual access. "New" products are considered to be those in the library-related marketplace for two years or less. Products that have been reintroduced in a new format or with substantial changes are also eligible.

"The American Association of Law Libraries is pleased to name Ravel Law's Judge Analytics tool as the winner of the 2016 AALL New Product Award," AALL President Keith Ann Stiverson said. "Ravel Law's product offers an in-depth look into the factors that influence how judges think, write, and rule to help members of the legal community work more effectively."

"We're honored that the law librarian community has recognized Judge Analytics as an innovative resource that improves how attorneys practice law," said Daniel Lewis, CEO and co-founder of Ravel Law. "Analytics is changing the legal research landscape, and we are focused on empowering students and practitioners with tools to sift through vast amounts of legal information and find what matters."

The New Product Award recipient will be recognized at AALL's upcoming 109th AALL Annual Meeting & Conference, to be held in Chicago from July 16-19, 2016.
